2017-2018

Title: Faculty Utilization Annual Report

Date of completion: September 18, 2019

Highlights of data: Based on a review of the 2016-2017 Faculty Load & Listing (fall 2016, spring 2017, and summer 2017 terms), 77.7 % of the teaching load at Vernon College was borne by full-time faculty with the remaining 22.3 % of the teaching load distributed among adjunct faculty. According to the report (CBM 004) provided to the THECB, 77.12% of the contact hours at Vernon College were taught by full-time faculty in Fall 2016.

Use of data: The need for additional full-time faculty will continue to be monitored based on the following factors:

- 1) Student enrollment and/or student demand for courses and programs
- 2) % of teaching load borne by full-time faculty within programs and disciplines (institutionally selected benchmark of 70% or higher)
- 3) Availability of qualified adjunct instructors within programs and disciplines

How associated to Student Success? During the 2016-17 academic year, there was an 81.7 % successful course completion rate among students enrolled in courses taught by full-time faculty as compared to a 82.7 % successful course completion rate by students enrolled in courses taught by part-time faculty. These data indicate an increase in student success for both full-time and part-time faculty over the previous academic year. Additionally, full-time faculty typically have a more vested interest in the initiatives of the institution outside the classroom and serve the institution in various capacities outside the classroom including student advising, service on committees and task forces, curriculum development and review, and accreditation and compliance efforts. It is imperative that the institution employ a sufficient number of full-time faculty to accomplish its institutional mission. Success was measured based on course grades of A, B, C, and P.
